A TRAINED DOG.

A novelty in a Harlem beer garden is a dog hat talks into the telephone. The proprie tor lives over his saloon, and when a thirsty crew of sufficient size enters the place the dog. Tim, is trotted out to entertain the crowd and put them in a generous mood. The minute Tim hears the bell he gives a bound and takes up his position on a high stool in front of the mouthplece, ready for business. Connection is made with the proprietor upstarrs and the fun begins. "Hello, Tim, is that you?"

"Bow.wow."

"Speak, you rascal."
"Bow!"

Sit up and beg for the gentlemen." | He Away goes Tim, down on the floor, and free sourrying around for a minute, back e comes again eager for more sport.

"Tim, how many drinks have the boys classed."

"Good dog! Sing for the gentlemen!"
Hercupon Tim howis.
"Tim, you're a chump,"
Tim soaps, suarls, and shows his teeth.
Il in all it is a remarkable dog and worth

Tinder Box and Phosphorus Bottle. It was necessary in former times for a light to be kept burning all night in one room, for to strike a light was a long and laborious operation. There were little silver boxes that contained amadou, the spongy texture of a puff ball, and some matches dipped in sulphur, also a flint. One side of the box was armed with a steel. In striking a light the holder put the amadou in position to receive the sparks from the steel as he struck the flint, then, when the amadou glowed, he touched it with the brimstone end of the match, and ignited that—a matter of five to ten minutes. Why, a burglar could clear off with the plate before the roused master of the house could strike a light and kindle his candle to look for him!

for him!

The tinder-box employed commonly in kitchens and cottages was a different application of the same principle. It consisted of a circular tin or iron box, with the socket for a candle soldered on to the top. This box contained a removable bottom. When opened it displayed a steel and a lump of filmt. These were taken out and the removable bottom lifted up, when below was disclosed a mass of black tinder. The manufacture of this tunder was one of the accomplishments of our forefathers, or rather foremothers. It was made of liner rag burnt in a close vessel, charred to tin-ne process is.

Then came in the phosphorus bottle, but teld its ground a very short while because f the danger attending it. This consisted f a small bottle, like one of smelling salts, but contained phesphorus. A match was brust into it and twirled about till it and twirled about till it. ignited the the match, but as simultaneous by the phosphorus in the bettle sometimes caught fire, this invention was speedily dis carded.—The Cornhill Magazine.

Mr. G. W. Smalley, in a news letter which is included in his recent book, thus describes the great German chancellor as be appeared in the Reichstag on the occa-sion of the first message of the new Em-peror when Frederick lay dying at Char-

"He strides heavily in; it is but a step from the door to the spot where the scarlet portfollo is waiting for him, but the weight of the step is what first strikes you. It is not lassitude; it is sheer physical bulk. He stands six feet two, and his frame is the frame of a giant. He is broad and square in the shoulders and deep-chested; the arms are big; the legs are big; and that part of the body which is intermediate between the legs and chest is big, not gross. He is as heroic in his physical proportions as in his character. The head is set on the shoulders and almost into them with a singular solidity and closeness. The man is all of a piece—body and mind, as it were, fused and welded together. Faithful as are many of the photographs, I remember none which brings out plainly the helmet shape of the head. It is the head of Pericles; dome-like in its amplitudes as well as in its curve, with a breadth at the temples which it towering height cannot disguise, and far overhanging the stern gray eyes, which look out from caverns, deep fringed with gray eyebrows. There is no regularity of feature or of contour. The nose is short and carelessly moulded; the mouth you must imagine, for a gray moustache smades it; the jaw is the jaw—well, of many cases are mirracles.

Much of what is written of the present disposition of the Indians toward an outbreak is evidently exaggerated, and, aside from this, we are strongly disposed to suspect plots to drive the Indians out of their possessions by means of war on the part of hose who covet these possessions for their own ownership.
